Acknowledgements

This research was made possible by AHRC grant AR14458 as part of the research project Null Subjects and the Structure of Parametric Theory. First and foremost, thanks go to my supervisors Anders Holmberg and Ian Roberts, who read through vast quantities of rough, half thought-out ideas and never once lost their patience. You have both been fabulous in your own different ways. Thanks go also to Theresa Biberauer, who has been a great mentor and friend over the past three years. My gratitude also to the other members of my research group: David Willis and Chris Johns, for providing useful feedback, beer, and advice along the way.

The production of this thesis would not have been possible without the many native Romance speakers who gave up their own precious time to help me. In chronological order I thank: António Guimarães, Tatiana Ortolan, José António Cruz da Ângela, Eugenio Barrio, Cilene Rodrigues, Déborah Oliveira, Mikash Hassamal, Marcello Modesto, Fernanda Pratas, Gerardo Fernández Salgueiro, Ana Carrera Hernández, Mary Fender, Roberta D'Alessandro, Carmen Ríos García, Alain Kihm, Incanha Intumbo, Susana Barros, Marlyse Baptista, Pilar Barbosa, Paola Crisma, and many more besides...All errors are of course my own.

There have been many inspirational people who have guided me along my linguistic path. Paloma García Bellido, David Adger, George Tsoulas and Ros Temple set me off. Meetings with Norvin Richards and Howard Lasnik served to broaden my perspective and open my eyes to new lines of inquiry. Talking to Johnny Butler, and Glyn Hicks helped to clarify certain things. Emails from Pilar Barbosa, João Costa and Nigel Vincent helped to bring new evidence to light.

Finally I must thank my friends and family, who have been the driving force behind the completion of this thesis: Mum, Dad, Mark and Tom for helping me keep a perspective and generally supporting me with everything; Monica and Alan for being great friends; Sophie with her ready ear and good advice; Lucy and Richard with their yummy cooking and scintillating conversation, Aarti with her beautiful smile and chocolate biscuits; Makiko with her gentleness and good humour; and Lieve and James with their general calming presence. Thanks also to all the staff and students at Newcastle: Marina, David, Nagla, Tina and Ben, especially. Thanks also to Sarah and Angela (at Durham) and Rowena, Melanie and Rob (at Newcastle), the most organised people in existence, for helping to keep me organised.

The biggest thanks of all goes to Zé. I would never have been able to complete this monster without your love and support (and your Portuguese judgments). This thesis is dedicated to you, boa leitura!
